An in vitro method for the isolation and quantitation of atrial natriuretic factor (ANF) from human plasma is described. The method is based on high-performance liquid chromatography (HPLC) separation using an immunosorbent. The chromatographic process does not require any pretreatment of the samples, which greatly simplifies and shortens the assay procedure. The stability of ANF-reactive immunosorbent as well as the analytical sensitivity and specificity of the immunoassay were examined and found satisfactory. It was also demonstrated that the immunoassay was very specific, as only ANF was retained, while porcine, bovine, and human plasma components, as well as steroids, were not absorbed. This method was used in the clinical evaluation of 13 patients with congestive heart failure (CHF) and 10 age-matched healthy controls. ANF-reactive immunosorbent was used for immunoabsorbent solid-phase extraction of ANF. The limit of detection of the assay was 1.5 pmol/L, and the recovery efficiency of the immunoabsorbent for ANF was 47.4 +/- 6.6%. There was no detectable cross-reactivity with ANP, C-type natriuretic peptide (CNP), or BNP. The mean ANF level was 33.3 +/- 13.5 pmol/L in the CHF patients and 14.4 +/-

I'm developing a website and I need to know whether there is a way to show a Chrome alert when an image loads in a child window. I don't know much about Javascript and I tried to do some research but can't find much help. This is a child window of another page. It may be easier to know how to close that alert when the image is loaded. A: You can access the Window that opened the image using opener.location.href, for example: // Is the window we opened the image in the same window as the current page? if (window.opener && window.opener.location.href == this.location.href) { // Show alert alert("Your alert!"); } You could use the same logic to check if the child window is in a tab or a frame, so you don't have to worry about pop-up warnings. A: This would do the job and you don't have to worry about pop-up warnings. if (window.opener.location.href === this.location.href) { // Show alert alert("Your alert!"); } It's something like this (just a guess). It would be easier if you can post the images that trigger the alert. The Canadian Association of University Teachers says it will no longer work with Ontario's biggest school board, and is threatening to boycott the provincial government if it doesn't abolish Bill 115. The impasse pits the largest teachers' union in the province against the government, which passed legislation that affects their ability to negotiate a contract. On its website, the CAUT is urging its 175,000 members to call the government to say they're boycotting the Liberal government until the legislation is repealed. The Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation (OSSTF) is the second-largest teachers' union in the province, after the CAUT, and has threatened the same thing, but the union says it won't go
